Kualoa's Newest Tours

Malama Experience

MALAMA is the Hawaiian word for "Sustainability." Land and water are important concepts to traditional Hawaiian society. Rain flows down from the mountain tops for decades, nourishing Kualoa's taro fields. During the Malama experience, you can experience planting and harvesting taro in a lo'i while learning about the sustainable living and food culture of Native Hawaiians.

You will participate in activities such as planting and harvesting kalo (taro), a traditional Hawaiian staple food, and helping with cleaning. You can wash your hands and feet in the sea or river, as they may get dirty from entering the fields. By continuing Hawaii's history, culture, and traditions, including agriculture, you can enjoy both traditional and modern Hawaii.

Kualoa Grown

Climb aboard a trolley bus and explore Kualoa's orchards while learning about our agriculture and aquaculture industry. You can sample a variety of foods grown and farmed at Kualoa Ranch including fresh fruits, fish, taro, macadamia nuts, etc. We will also stop by Hale Nanea Village, which was used in the filming of several movies, including 50 First Dates.

Take a tour and then stop by the Kualoa Grown Market. The market sells produce, livestock products, and products that are sustainably grown and raised at Kualoa Ranch.

Koa Planting/Private UTV

Learn about Kualoa's long history of land management and conservation efforts, controlling invasive species and restoring native species, while planting one of Hawaii's traditionally important koa trees. Hawaiians have traditionally used koa wood to hand-carve a variety of items, including umeke (wooden bowls), waa (canoes), and meakaua (weapons). This 3-hour Private UTV and tree planting experience provides an up-close experience of Hawaiian culture and Kualoa conservation efforts.
